- When a donor has more than one charitable interest, they can make one gift to an endowment fund and name several organizations as recipients of a portion of the annual distribution.
- Endowment funds are expected to grow over time.
- Donors like endowments to be an arms-length away from the organization they want to benefit.
- Some organizations do not have the capability of handling complex charitable gifts (land, commodities, business interests).
- Some organizations do not understand the endowment (never spending the principal) concept.
- Most organizations do not have estate-planning expertise.
- Resources stay in the community
